You have the right to speak with your attorney or to consult with anyone else who may help. For specific legal advice on individual situations, please consult an attorney.

The rights listed here may vary depending on the circumstances. The text of this poster contains general information about the rights of employees and employers. You may also bypass the VETS process and bring a civil action against an employer for willful or repeated violations of the law. Civil money penalties may also be assessed for willful or repeated violations of the minimum wage or overtime pay provisions of the law. Civil money penalties may also be assessed for willful or repeated violations of the minimum wage or overtime pay provisions of the law. Civil money penalties may also be assessed for willful or repeated violations of the minimum wage or overtime pay provisions of the law. Civil money penalties may also be assessed for willful or repeated violations of the minimum wage or overtime pay provisions of the law.

The FMLA does not affect any federal or state law prohibiting discrimination or supersede any state or local law or collective bargaining agreement that provides greater family and medical leave rights. The FMLA requires employers to provide a total of 12 weeks of unpaid, job-protected leave for certain family and medical reasons. The FMLA does not require employers to pay employees for the leave they take.

You have the right to return to your job in the same or a comparable job with the same pay and benefits as you had when you left. You have the right to return to your job in the same or a comparable job with the same pay and benefits as you had when you left. You have the right to return to your job in the same or a comparable job with the same pay and benefits as you had when you left. You have the right to return to your job in the same or a comparable job with the same pay and benefits as you had when you left. You have the right to return to your job in the same or a comparable job with the same pay and benefits as you had when you left. You have the right to return to your job in the same or a comparable job with the same pay and benefits as you had when you left. You have the right to return to your job in the same or a comparable job with the same pay and benefits as you had when you left.

You have the right to file a complaint with the Department of Labor if you believe your employer has violated the law. You have the right to file a complaint with the Department of Labor if you believe your employer has violated the law. You have the right to file a complaint with the Department of Labor if you believe your employer has violated the law. You have the right to file a complaint with the Department of Labor if you believe your employer has violated the law. You have the right to file a complaint with the Department of Labor if you believe your employer has violated the law.

You have the right to receive a written statement of your rights under the FMLA from your employer. You have the right to receive a written statement of your rights under the FMLA from your employer. You have the right to receive a written statement of your rights under the FMLA from your employer. You have the right to receive a written statement of your rights under the FMLA from your employer. You have the right to receive a written statement of your rights under the FMLA from your employer.

The FMLA requires employers to provide a total of 12 weeks of unpaid, job-protected leave for certain family and medical reasons. The FMLA does not require employers to pay employees for the leave they take.

You have the right to return to your job in the same or a comparable job with the same pay and benefits as you had when you left. You have the right to return to your job in the same or a comparable job with the same pay and benefits as you had when you left. You have the right to return to your job in the same or a comparable job with the same pay and benefits as you had when you left. You have the right to return to your job in the same or a comparable job with the same pay and benefits as you had when you left. You have the right to return to your job in the same or a comparable job with the same pay and benefits as you had when you left. You have the right to return to your job in the same or a comparable job with the same pay and benefits as you had when you left. You have the right to return to your job in the same or a comparable job with the same pay and benefits as you had when you left.

You have the right to file a complaint with the Department of Labor if you believe your employer has violated the law. You have the right to file a complaint with the Department of Labor if you believe your employer has violated the law. You have the right to file a complaint with the Department of Labor if you believe your employer has violated the law. You have the right to file a complaint with the Department of Labor if you believe your employer has violated the law. You have the right to file a complaint with the Department of Labor if you believe your employer has violated the law.

You have the right to receive a written statement of your rights under the FMLA from your employer. You have the right to receive a written statement of your rights under the FMLA from your employer. You have the right to receive a written statement of your rights under the FMLA from your employer. You have the right to receive a written statement of your rights under the FMLA from your employer. You have the right to receive a written statement of your rights under the FMLA from your employer.

The FMLA requires employers to provide a total of 12 weeks of unpaid, job-protected leave for certain family and medical reasons. The FMLA does not require employers to pay employees for the leave they take.

You have the right to return to your job in the same or a comparable job with the same pay and benefits as you had when you left. You have the right to return to your job in the same or a comparable job with the same pay and benefits as you had when you left. You have the right to return to your job in the same or a comparable job with the same pay and benefits as you had when you left. You have the right to return to your job in the same or a comparable job with the same pay and benefits as you had when you left. You have the right to return to your job in the same or a comparable job with the same pay and benefits as you had when you left. You have the right to return to your job in the same or a comparable job with the same pay and benefits as you had when you left. You have the right to return to your job in the same or a comparable job with the same pay and benefits as you had when you left.

You have the right to file a complaint with the Department of Labor if you believe your employer has violated the law. You have the right to file a complaint with the Department of Labor if you believe your employer has violated the law. You have the right to file a complaint with the Department of Labor if you believe your employer has violated the law. You have the right to file a complaint with the Department of Labor if you believe your employer has violated the law. You have the right to file a complaint with the Department of Labor if you believe your employer has violated the law.

You have the right to receive a written statement of your rights under the FMLA from your employer. You have the right to receive a written statement of your rights under the FMLA from your employer. You have the right to receive a written statement of your rights under the FMLA from your employer. You have the right to receive a written statement of your rights under the FMLA from your employer. You have the right to receive a written statement of your rights under the FMLA from your employer.

The FMLA requires employers to provide a total of 12 weeks of unpaid, job-protected leave for certain family and medical reasons. The FMLA does not require employers to pay employees for the leave they take.